COMPANY

Since 1990, Pereira e Silva Agrícola has been building its history in the fruit-growing hub of the Baixo Açu Project, in Alto do Rodrigues/RN. Founded by Aldair, the company's CEO, the company was born with a clear purpose: to produce high-quality mangoes with consistency and international standards.

Today, we cultivate the Tommy Atkins, Palmer, and Keitt varieties, recognized globally for their excellent commercial acceptance, distinctive flavor, firmness, and long shelf life. Our production is guided by rigorous quality criteria, specialized technical handling, and a total focus on customer satisfaction.

PRODUCTS

NCM 0804.50.20

We work with three widely recognized and highly demanded mango varieties in the international market: Tommy Atkins, Palmer, and Keitt. These varieties are strategically selected for their excellent commercial acceptance, logistical reliability, and high quality standards, which are fundamental characteristics for meeting the demands of export markets.

Our fruits stand out for their consistent quality throughout the entire production process, exhibiting excellent visual balance, with attractive color, uniform shape, and well-defined sizes. This set of attributes gives the sleeves a premium visual appeal, enhancing the product both at the point of sale and in the perception of the end consumer.

In addition to their visual appeal, our mangoes feature firm and consistent flesh, an essential characteristic for ensuring greater durability and resistance during transport and storage. Excellent post-harvest performance provides a longer shelf life, improving distribution logistics and ensuring that the product reaches the consumer with a high level of quality.

Another important distinguishing feature is its intense and distinctive flavor, the result of careful handling and production conditions that prioritize fruit quality. This combination of attributes — superior appearance, post-harvest durability, and distinctive flavor — contributes to offering a premium consumer experience, strengthening the product's competitiveness and value in the national and international markets.
